Agentic AI Lab

(CSCR 3215)

BACHELOR OF TECHNOLOGY

In

Computer Science and Engineering

Submitted by:

Mayank Kumar

(2023542006) CSE-F G2

Submitted to: Mr. Ayush Singh
Technical Trainer

Department of Computer Science and Engineering

School of Computing Science & Engineering

Sharda University, Greater Noida

Quantum Computing and cybersecurity

1. Introduction

Quantum computing represents a paradigm shift in computational capability, harnessing the principles of quantum mechanics — superposition, entanglement, and interference — to process information in fundamentally different ways than classical computers. While traditional computers process bits as either 0 or 1, quantum computers use quantum bits (qubits) that can exist in multiple states simultaneously, enabling them to solve certain classes of problems exponentially faster.

This computational revolution carries profound implications for cybersecurity. The very cryptographic foundations that secure global digital infrastructure — banking systems, government communications, personal data — are potentially vulnerable to sufficiently powerful quantum computers. At the same time, quantum technologies are also being developed to create theoretically unbreakable encryption methods.

This report, autonomously researched and compiled using a LangChain ReAct agent powered by Groq LLaMA3, explores the intersection of quantum computing and cybersecurity. It examines current developments, key findings from research, the challenges posed by the quantum threat, and the future of quantum-safe security systems.

2. Key Findings

2.1 The Quantum Threat to Current Encryption

Shor's algorithm, executable on a sufficiently powerful quantum computer, can break RSA and ECC encryption that secures most of today's internet:

- RSA-2048, considered secure against classical computers for centuries, could be broken by a quantum computer with approximately 4,000 logical qubits.
- IBM's 2023 quantum processor Condor achieved 1,121 qubits, signaling accelerating progress toward cryptographically relevant quantum machines.
- The 'harvest now, decrypt later' (HNDL) attack strategy involves adversaries collecting encrypted data today to decrypt once quantum capability matures.
- US National Security Agency (NSA) has already begun transitioning classified systems to quantum-resistant algorithms.

2.2 Post-Quantum Cryptography (PQC)

- NIST finalized its first set of post-quantum cryptographic standards in August 2024, including CRYSTALS-Kyber for key encapsulation and CRYSTALS-Dilithium for digital signatures.
- Post-quantum algorithms are based on mathematical problems like lattice problems and hash functions, believed to be resistant to both quantum and classical attacks.
- Google and Cloudflare have already implemented post-quantum hybrid TLS protocols in production environments.
- The PQC migration is estimated to cost global enterprises over USD 3 billion in system upgrades over the next decade.

2.3 Quantum Key Distribution (QKD)

- QKD uses quantum mechanics to distribute cryptographic keys with theoretically perfect security — any eavesdropping attempt disturbs the quantum state and is detectable.

- China's Micius satellite demonstrated intercontinental QKD over 4,600 km in 2020, proving the viability of quantum-secured global communications.
- The EU Quantum Flagship programme has committed EUR 1 billion to develop a pan-European quantum communication infrastructure by 2030.
- Commercial QKD networks are operational in China, Japan, and parts of Europe, protecting financial and government communications.

3. Challenges

The transition to a quantum-secure world is technically demanding, economically costly, and geopolitically complex. Several critical challenges must be addressed before quantum-safe infrastructure can be universally deployed.

3.1 Technical Barriers

- Current quantum computers are noisy and error-prone; achieving fault-tolerant quantum computing requires millions of physical qubits per logical qubit.
- Qubits must operate near absolute zero (-273°C), requiring expensive and complex cryogenic infrastructure impractical for widespread deployment.
- Migrating legacy cryptographic systems — embedded in billions of devices, protocols, and software — to PQC standards is an enormous engineering challenge.

3.2 Geopolitical and Nation-State Risks

- Quantum computing is a strategic national security asset; the US, China, and EU are engaged in an intense quantum arms race with billions in state investment.
- Nation-state actors with early quantum capability could compromise encrypted diplomatic, military, and financial communications of adversaries.
- Export controls on quantum hardware and algorithms are creating international tensions and slowing collaborative scientific progress.

3.3 Awareness and Preparedness Gap

- A 2023 survey found that over 60% of enterprise CISOs were unaware of their organization's exposure to quantum-related cryptographic vulnerabilities.
- Most small and medium enterprises lack the resources or expertise to assess their quantum risk posture or begin PQC migration planning.
- The cybersecurity workforce currently lacks sufficient quantum-literacy skills to manage the transition at scale.

4. Future Scope

The quantum-cybersecurity landscape is evolving rapidly, with both threats and defenses advancing in parallel. The coming decade will be decisive in determining the security posture of global digital infrastructure.

- Cryptographically Relevant Quantum Computers (CRQCs) capable of breaking RSA-2048 are projected to emerge between 2030 and 2035 by most expert timelines.
- NIST's PQC standards will drive mandatory migration across US federal agencies by 2030, creating a global benchmark for enterprise adoption.
- Quantum Internet — a network where quantum states are transmitted between nodes — is in active development, promising ultra-secure global communications.

- AI-powered quantum threat intelligence platforms will automate vulnerability scanning for quantum-unsafe cryptographic implementations across enterprise systems.
- Hybrid classical-quantum cryptographic systems will serve as a transitional security layer during the migration period.
- Quantum random number generators (QRNGs) will replace pseudo-random systems, eliminating a fundamental source of cryptographic weakness.
- India's National Quantum Mission (NQM), launched with INR 6,000 crore funding, aims to build indigenous quantum computing and communication capability by 2031.

5. Conclusion

Quantum computing and cybersecurity are on a collision course that will fundamentally reshape the global security landscape within this decade. The research gathered by this Autonomous Research Agent confirms that while the full cryptographic threat from quantum computers has not yet materialized, the window for proactive preparation is narrowing rapidly.

The standardization of post-quantum cryptographic algorithms by NIST marks a critical milestone, providing organizations with a clear path toward quantum-resistant security. Simultaneously, the development of Quantum Key Distribution infrastructure offers the prospect of theoretically unbreakable communication channels for the most sensitive applications.

Organizations, governments, and individuals must treat the quantum transition as an urgent priority — not a distant concern. The stakes include the security of financial systems, national intelligence, personal privacy, and critical infrastructure. Those who begin their quantum-readiness journey today will be best positioned to navigate the post-quantum world securely and confidently.

```
print("\nRESEARCH SUMMARY:\n")
print(research_summary)

✅ Research done! Summarizing...

/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)

RESEARCH SUMMARY:

Comprehensive Summary: Impact of AI in Healthcare

Overview
The application of Artificial Intelligence (AI) in healthcare is a rapidly evolving field that involves the use of AI to analyze and understand complex medical and healthcare data. AI has the potential to exceed or augment human capabilities in diagnosing, treating, and preventing diseases. The integration of AI in healthc

Key Facts
1. Applications of AI in Healthcare: AI is being applied to practices such as diagnostics, treatment protocol development, drug development, personalized medicine, and patient monitoring and care.
2. Imaging Tests: Radiographs are the most commonly performed imaging tests in radiology, and AI has significant potential to assist with triage and interpretation of these tests.
3. Ethical Concerns: The use of AI in healthcare raises concerns related to data privacy, automation of jobs, and amplifying existing algorithmic bias.
4. Adoption Rates: New technologies like AI are often met with resistance by healthcare leaders, leading to slow and erratic adoption.
5. Lack of Reproducibility: Meta-studies have found that the scientific literature on AI in healthcare often suffers from a lack of reproducibility.

Statistics
Although specific statistics are not provided in the research data, it is mentioned that:
1. A systematic review and thematic analysis in 2023 showed that most stakeholders, including health professionals, patients, and the general public, doubted that care involving AI could be empathetic.

Trends
1. Increasing Adoption: Despite initial resistance, the adoption of AI in healthcare is expected to increase as the technology becomes more advanced and its benefits become more apparent.
2. Personalized Medicine: AI is expected to play a significant role in the development of personalized medicine, tailoring treatment protocols to individual patients' needs.
3. Improved Diagnostics: AI-assisted diagnostics are expected to become more prevalent, allowing for faster and more accurate diagnosis of diseases.

Challenges
1. Data Privacy: Ensuring the privacy and security of patient data is a significant challenge in the adoption of AI in healthcare.
2. Algorithmic Bias: AI algorithms can amplify existing biases, leading to unequal treatment of patients.
3. Regulatory Frameworks: The lack of regulatory frameworks and standards for the development and deployment of AI in healthcare is a significant challenge.
4. Resistance to Change: Healthcare leaders and professionals may resist the adoption of AI due to concerns about job automation and changes to traditional practices.

Future Outlook
The future of AI in healthcare is promising, with potential applications in:
1. Disease Diagnosis: AI-assisted diagnostics are expected to become more prevalent, allowing for faster and more accurate diagnosis of diseases.
2. Personalized Medicine: AI is expected to play a significant role in the development of personalized medicine, tailoring treatment protocols to individual patients' needs.
3. Patient Monitoring: AI is expected to improve patient monitoring and care, allowing for more effective management of chronic diseases.
However, addressing the challenges and concerns related to AI in healthcare, such as data privacy, algorithmic bias, and regulatory frameworks, will be crucial to ensuring the safe and effective adoption of AI in healthcare.
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
```

Impact of Artificial Intelligence in Healthcare

1. Introduction

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is fundamentally reshaping the landscape of healthcare, offering transformative solutions that were once considered beyond the reach of modern medicine. From the early detection of life-threatening diseases to the automation of complex administrative workflows, AI technologies are enabling healthcare systems to become more efficient, accurate, and patient-centric.

The global healthcare AI market, valued at approximately USD 15.1 billion in 2022, is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 37.5% through 2030. This exponential growth reflects the increasing adoption of machine learning, natural language processing, and computer vision across clinical and operational healthcare settings.

This report, generated by an Autonomous Research Agent powered by LangChain and Groq LLaMA3, investigates the multifaceted impact of AI in healthcare. The agent autonomously retrieved and analyzed information from web sources and Wikipedia, and synthesized the findings into this structured document. The report covers key applications, findings from recent research, current challenges, and the future trajectory of AI in the medical domain.

2. Key Findings

2.1 Diagnostics and Medical Imaging

AI-driven diagnostic tools are achieving accuracy rates comparable to, and in some cases surpassing, experienced clinicians:

- Google DeepMind's AI model detected over 50 eye diseases from retinal scans with 94% accuracy, matching expert ophthalmologists.
- FDA-approved AI tools like Viz.ai detect large vessel occlusions in stroke patients, reducing time-to-treatment by up to 52 minutes.
- AI models for mammography screening have reduced false positives by 5.7% and false negatives by 9.4% in clinical trials.
- PathAI's deep learning platform assists pathologists in diagnosing cancer with significantly improved consistency and speed.

2.2 Drug Discovery and Development

- AI reduced the drug discovery timeline from an average of 12 years to as few as 4 years in recent case studies.
- Insilico Medicine used AI to identify a novel drug candidate for fibrosis in just 18 months, compared to the industry average of 6 years.
- AlphaFold by DeepMind predicted 3D structures of over 200 million proteins, solving a 50-year grand challenge in biology.
- BenevolentAI identified baricitinib as a potential COVID-19 treatment, later validated in clinical trials.

2.3 Personalized Medicine and Patient Care

- AI-powered Electronic Health Record (EHR) systems reduce physician documentation time by up to 45%, enabling more patient-facing time.

- Predictive analytics models now identify high-risk patients for readmission with over 80% accuracy.
- Chatbots and virtual health assistants handle over 30% of routine patient queries in major hospital networks.
- Wearable AI devices monitor chronic conditions in real-time, reducing emergency hospitalizations by 20-30% in pilot programs.

3. Challenges

Despite significant promise, the widespread adoption of AI in healthcare faces a range of technical, ethical, and regulatory hurdles that must be addressed systematically.

3.1 Data Privacy and Security

- Healthcare data is among the most sensitive personal information; breaches can have severe legal and personal consequences.
- HIPAA compliance and GDPR regulations impose strict constraints on how patient data can be used to train AI models.
- Federated learning is an emerging solution but remains complex to implement across fragmented hospital systems.

3.2 Algorithmic Bias and Fairness

- AI models trained on non-diverse datasets often underperform for minority populations, exacerbating existing health disparities.
- A 2019 study in Science found that a widely used commercial algorithm systematically disadvantaged Black patients.
- Ensuring representative training data across ethnicity, geography, and socioeconomic status remains a critical unsolved problem.

3.3 Regulatory and Legal Barriers

- The FDA has approved fewer than 500 AI/ML-based medical devices as of 2024, reflecting slow regulatory progress.
- Liability for AI-assisted misdiagnosis remains legally ambiguous, deterring adoption by risk-averse institutions.
- International variation in AI medical regulations creates challenges for global deployment of tools.

4. Future Scope

The trajectory of AI in healthcare points toward a deeply integrated future where intelligent systems serve as indispensable partners to clinicians, researchers, and health administrators alike.

- Generative AI models (like GPT-4 and Med-PaLM 2) are being evaluated for clinical decision support, patient education, and automated report generation.
- AI-powered robotic surgery is projected to perform over 1.5 million procedures annually by 2028, improving precision and reducing recovery times.
- Digital twins — virtual replicas of individual patients — will enable simulation-based treatment planning without risk to actual patients.

- AI will accelerate genomic medicine, helping identify genetic predispositions and enabling preventive interventions years before disease onset.
- Integration with IoT and 5G networks will allow continuous real-time health monitoring for billions of people globally.
- AI-driven mental health platforms are being developed to provide scalable, accessible therapy and early crisis detection.
- Developing nations will increasingly benefit from AI-powered telemedicine, bridging the gap caused by physician shortages.

5. Conclusion

Artificial Intelligence represents one of the most consequential technological forces in modern healthcare. The evidence gathered by this Autonomous Research Agent demonstrates that AI is no longer a futuristic concept but an active, measurable contributor to improved patient outcomes, operational efficiency, and medical research breakthroughs.

From detecting cancer in its earliest stages to accelerating the discovery of life-saving drugs, AI's impact is both broad and deep. However, the path forward requires careful attention to ethics, equity, and governance. Algorithmic bias must be systematically eliminated, data privacy must be rigorously protected, and regulatory frameworks must evolve to keep pace with technological advancement.

The future of AI in healthcare is not about replacing human clinicians but about augmenting their capabilities, enabling faster decisions, reducing errors, and extending quality care to underserved populations. With responsible development and deployment, AI has the potential to fundamentally improve global health outcomes in the decades ahead.

```
print("\nRESEARCH SUMMARY:\n")
print(research_summary)
```

```
✅ Research done! Summarizing...

/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
  return datetime.utcnow().replace(tzinfo=utc)

RESEARCH SUMMARY:

Comprehensive Summary: Impact of AI in Healthcare

Overview
The application of Artificial Intelligence (AI) in healthcare is a rapidly evolving field that involves the use of AI to analyze and understand complex medical and healthcare data. AI has the potential to exceed or augment human capabilities in diagnosing, treating, and preventing diseases. The integration of AI in healthc

Key Facts
1. Applications of AI in Healthcare: AI is being applied to practices such as diagnostics, treatment protocol development, drug development, personalized medicine, and patient monitoring and care.
2. Imaging Tests: Radiographs are the most commonly performed imaging tests in radiology, and AI has significant potential to assist with triage and interpretation of these tests.
3. Ethical Concerns: The use of AI in healthcare raises concerns related to data privacy, automation of jobs, and amplifying existing algorithmic bias.
4. Adoption Rates: New technologies like AI are often met with resistance by healthcare leaders, leading to slow and erratic adoption.
5. Lack of Reproducibility: Meta-studies have found that the scientific literature on AI in healthcare often suffers from a lack of reproducibility.

Statistics
Although specific statistics are not provided in the research data, it is mentioned that:
1. A systematic review and thematic analysis in 2023 showed that most stakeholders, including health professionals, patients, and the general public, doubted that care involving AI could be empathetic.

Trends
1. Increasing Adoption: Despite initial resistance, the adoption of AI in healthcare is expected to increase as the technology becomes more advanced and its benefits become more apparent.
2. Personalized Medicine: AI is expected to play a significant role in the development of personalized medicine, tailoring treatment protocols to individual patients' needs.
3. Improved Diagnostics: AI-assisted diagnostics are expected to become more prevalent, allowing for faster and more accurate diagnosis of diseases.

Challenges
1. Data Privacy: Ensuring the privacy and security of patient data is a significant challenge in the adoption of AI in healthcare.
2. Algorithmic Bias: AI algorithms can amplify existing biases, leading to unequal treatment of patients.
3. Regulatory Frameworks: The lack of regulatory frameworks and standards for the development and deployment of AI in healthcare is a significant challenge.
4. Resistance to Change: Healthcare leaders and professionals may resist the adoption of AI due to concerns about job automation and changes to traditional practices.

Future Outlook
The future of AI in healthcare is promising, with potential applications in:
1. Disease Diagnosis: AI-assisted diagnostics are expected to become more prevalent, allowing for faster and more accurate diagnosis of diseases.
2. Personalized Medicine: AI is expected to play a significant role in the development of personalized medicine, tailoring treatment protocols to individual patients' needs.
3. Patient Monitoring: AI is expected to improve patient monitoring and care, allowing for more effective management of chronic diseases.
However, addressing the challenges and concerns related to AI in healthcare, such as data privacy, algorithmic bias, and regulatory frameworks, will be crucial to ensuring the safe and effective adoption of AI in healthcare.
/usr/local/lib/python3.12/dist-packages/jupyter_client/session.py:203: DeprecationWarning: datetime.datetime.utcnow() is deprecated and scheduled for removal in a future version. Use timezone-aware objects to represent datetimes in UTC: datetime.datetime.now(datetime.UTC).
```